TIME TO GO SOLAR!

Are Heat Pumps less expensive for warming your home?

From the owner of Solar Bill Review:

A few years ago I first started hearing about heat pumps and I thought it was only for Heating swimming pools. Then I learned that family after family was moving from gas heating to electric heating. When my neighbor across the street, Raghu, had his gas heater go kaput, we looked together online to see what would be more expensive to heat the home with and all the studies show that electric heating is actually less expensive than gas heating. As many of my clients who went solar with me over the years have moved to the heat pump, it has been confirmed that the heat pump saves money. Last year, my wife Nora and myself added a heat pump to our home where we've lived together for the last 25 years and we are very happy with the upgrade. I now know that SOLAR is the future. I also know that HEAT PUMPS are the future.

Customer Spotlight

Anil in Pleasanton installed solar on his Cal Shake Metal roof about five years ago.

He's projected to reach his break even point this year. This is even after the cost of a customized roof type installation. He started off on a loan, which allowed more meaningful electricity payments instead of paying 100% interest to PG&E. Along the way, he decided to pay off his loan early.

Interested in adding more solar?

Here are two options for NEM and NEM-2 customers to add panels without losing NEM status on the existing system:

Option A (Non-Export System): Adding a system with a separate meter doesn't cost much. You can add panels and a battery independent of your other system. This also serves as a backup for your home in case of power outages.

Option B: If you have a SolarEdge inverter with power optimizers, you may qualify to add more panels. Typically, the inverter has greater capacity than the panel capacity. You can add panels to maximize the inverter capacity without losing your NEM status because you are not increasing your 'system size.'

Dennis & Nettie in Jamestown went solar with no money down and their savings has grown and grown over the last four years. So far they've saved over $4,400 with no money out of pocket. The glow in the dark butterfly that was the symbol of starting energy independence still flies with the power of the sun and shines bright in the night!

Piyush in Dublin paid cash and in only 5 years after going solar, has already reached the break even point. All the energy he and his family are producing with the power of the sun is completely free now.
